My Notebook

(Chapter 2)

September 8

I just moved into the city of their headquarters in an apartment. Apparently, they close down at 9 p.m.

Also, they claim to be an... gah, an "innocent" company willing to rule the world...they just ruled over my life, what else do they want?

Moving away from that, I have some documents from the previous My Notebook and recent ones, which is in the next page.

I'm here. Now, what do you want?
Your friend is gone?

Woah, rather sad...who was your friend, anyway?
I can't tell if you don't give me the name.
You're wasting my time! I quit. Goodbye.

My friend, [REDACTED] sent me this message and asked me to decode it down.

It's rather confusing why this was sent to him, but I wish him a nice day.

He was a lie. He was just a stupid failed experiment that we had no control over.
He's now running free from who he was meant to be. We're sending the two of them.
This is the end of him. He doesn't deserve freedom. He's a failed person with no use.

The clock has hit exactly 9 p.m. This is the time of revenge! I'll tell you my master plan in words.

First of all, I'm gonna wait for a few minutes. Second, I'll exit through the window of my apartment. Third, I'll climb up the building while gripping onto the windows. Finally, I'll have a fight with both the owner and my assistant! Yes, that's perfect!

Sorry, but I have quit. After doing some research, the problem was not the company. It was my friends. I'll slowly betray them, and they will never ruin my life, ever, as in ever and ever.
